Senator Ted W. Lieu

speaking on

California High Speed Rail: Boon or Boondoggle?

The Sierra Club and the Tea Party don't agree on much, but they both think that high speed rail in California is a very bad idea. Governor Jerry Brown and Senator Ted Lieu are convinced that the project will bring jobs and opportunities to the state. Senator Lieu, who is running for U.S. Congressman Henry Waxman's seat, went on record in July, 2012: "If you still believe in the California dream, in our resources and our people, if you believe our best days are yet to come, you will vote for this." No matter which side of the fence you are on, you will want to hear Senator Lieu talk about this project which is controversial, to say the least. Do we have the political will to build it? Can we afford it? Can we solve the compatibility issues? Will this project help or hurt the environment? Will this lead to smart growth or will it only benefit contractors with political pull? If we build it, will they come?

Every Californian would be impacted by this enormous project. Weigh in with our California senator who might possibly be representing us in Congress. Senator Lieu, who is a Stanford grad with a law degree from Georgetown, will talk about the history, current status, pros and cons of the issue; then he will open the floor to questions and discussion. Don't miss this important and timely Forum talk.
